

DEBORAH K. RUDOLPH

Deborah K. Rudolph has been Manager of the Technology Policy Council since 1989, handling telecommunication and medical technology issues. She has more than 20 years' experience in government relations in the public and private sectors. Previously she directed public affairs for an economic consulting firm and handled public relations for public-sector clients at a New York PR firm. In addition, she has handled intergovernmental relations for a White House advisory panel and congressional relations for the White House Office of Management and Budget, and she handled legislative analysis in the U.S. Senate for four years. Debbie serves on the board of the Carlyle House Museum in Alexandria, Va.