

PEGGY HUTCHESON

Peggy Hutcheson, Ph.D. is the founding partner of the Odyssey Group, which has been delivering competency models, change processes, and leadership development to public and private organizations for over 20 years.

She has led global learning initiatives for Fortune 100 clients, as well as working with small privately-held businesses and federal and state government agencies. She is actively supporting the Governor of Georgia's initiative to improve customer service by state agencies throughout the State of Georgia, an effort that has received national recognition.

Peggy has served for many years on the American Society of Training and Development's (ASTD) local and national governing boards and is currently a board member for an international association of facilitation professionals. She works with the IEEE-USA to promote innovation and competitiveness in this country. Currently she is co-chair of IEEE's Innovation Institute and a past chair of its Employment and Career Services group.

Peggy is a speaker and author, having co-authored Helping Employees Manage Careers, published more than a dozen articles, presented a half dozen invited webinars, and contributed to five books. Her contributions have been recognized with leadership awards from ASTD, the IEEE, and Georgia State University. As a faculty member of Kennesaw State University, she teaches Communications Theory, Organizational Training and Development, and other organizational communication courses.
